but I state on high authority he is sending the Duke of Mecklenburg with a portion of his army moving the bulk of his force, not less than 150,000 men, northward to form a junction with Kerensky, who is coming from the west, and with Bourbaki coming from the southwest. They will then move quickly on to Paris with their combined armies, which will be under the command of Gambetta and Danneberg. Bourbaki, leaving behind him large reserves, is moving forward with 60,000 perfectly armed and trained troops. Kerensky has 50,000. When these armies effect a junction the number of troops will not be less than 165,000, besides their reserves and 100,000 of the army of Loire entrenched at Orleans and holding the line extensively north of Chateau, Dun and Chartres. A part of Frederick Charles' army has established a communication with the Duke of Mecklenburg, between Stamps and Fontainebleau. The whole force of the former will probably effect a junction on the 23d. The united strength of his forces will then be 100,000 men.

The strategy of Danneberg has drawn them considerably south where he confronts them with an entrenched army of equal numbers, while with the main body of 265,000 men he moves on Versailles from the West.
